

ASPENDALE

1 mile west of Kenton

Begun in 1771 and completed in 1773, this moderately sized brick farmhouse shows the persistence of early-Georgian architectural traditions in colonial Delaware. It utilizes the “Quaker plan,” a single great room on one side with two rooms sharing a chimney on the other. An older frame wing is attached to the house. Aspendale still presides over a rural landscape, with lanes and field divisions much as they were in the 18th century.
